Mrs. Elizabeth Keckley, Mrs. Mary Lincoln's confidant and dressmaker. Library of Congress. Peter Cozzens. There's a nighttime scene in Steven Spielberg's Lincoln in which the president tells an African-American woman about his uncertainty over what freedom will bring emancipated slaves after the Civil War. Elizabeth Hobbs lived a turbulent early life, with both the anguish common to slavery and privileges denied most slaves. Her mother taught her to sew, and somehow, probably with the Burwells' permission, she learned to read and write. VIII, 415 pages : 21 cm. Historian Catherine Clinton draws on important new research to illuminate the remarkable life of Mary Lincoln. Her story is inextricably tied with her husband's presidency, yet her life is an extraordinary chronicle on its own. From an aristocratic Kentucky family, she was an educated, well-connected Southern daughter, and when she married a Springfield lawyer she became a Northern wife--an experience mirrored by thousands of her countrywomen. The Lincolns endured many personal setbacks, including the death of a child and defeats in two Senate races. Mrs. Lincoln herself suffered scorching press attacks. The assassination of her husband haunted her for the rest of her life. While there have been numerous Hollywood portraits and stories revolving around the life and times of Abraham Lincoln himself, "The Last of Mrs. Lincoln" is the only known account on his wife, Mary, who not only pushed her husband to the presidency of the White House, but was by his side at the Ford Theater when he was assassinated by a crazed actor. While all this is mentioned in dialogue through portions of the story, this videotaped presentation is all about Mary Todd Lincoln's struggles through the years and coping over the loss of her husband, her second son, Willie (who died in the White House during Lincoln's presidency in 1862), and further tragedy in her personal life that was to follow.
