Profiles with Christian and Islamic symbols. Happy New Year! Among other things, 2016 marks my 20th year as a Christian and my 11th year studying Islam. That experience has made me the frequent target of many questions, and uncomfortably frequent hostility (and not from Muslims). As Muslim presence in America grows, and as events like those in Paris and San Bernadino dominate the headlines, it is more important than ever for Christians to understand Islam and work to reach this critical mission field. In this series of blogs, I hope to bring readers to a better understanding of Islam, equipping them to engage in well-reasoned and informed conversation with both Muslims and fellow Christians. To start, let's look at three key points that will drive much of subsequent discussions

Preface: A Christian's Guide to the Koran. As a lifelong Christian, I possess no accurate, firsthand knowledge of Islam's religious doctrines nor have many close personal relationships with any of its Muslim followers. What little I know about Islam stems solely from vague secondhand sources. The Quran promotes its own modified view of Christianity and Jesus' life. The Koran expands on Mary's life, introduces new tales of Jesus' early life, and goes to great lengths to deemphasize Jesus as a divine figure, proclaiming he was simply another "Messenger" (like Muhammad). In fact, Islam teaches its followers that Jesus' crucifixion did not occur but rather was a cunning deception. The Koran tells different versions of Old Testament stories.
